The Rise of E-Learning

The way people learn has changed dramatically over the past decade. Traditional classrooms are no longer the only place where students can gain knowledge. Thanks to the internet, e-learning has become a popular alternative for people of all ages. One of the biggest advantages of online courses is flexibility. Students can study at their own pace and choose the time that suits them best. This is particularly helpful for people who work full-time or have family responsibilities. However, e-learning also requires a high level of self-discipline. Without a teacher physically present, it is easy to become distracted or lose motivation. Additionally, some subjects, like medicine or chemistry, require hands-on practice that is difficult to provide online. Despite these challenges, many universities are now offering "blended learning," which combines online materials with traditional face-to-face sessions

29. What is the main idea of the passage?

- A) Traditional classrooms are better than online learning.
- B) E-learning is a flexible but challenging alternative to traditional education.
- C) Universities are closing their physical campuses.
- D) Self-discipline is not important for online students.

30. According to the text, what is a primary benefit of e-learning?

- A) It is cheaper than traditional schools.
- B) Students don't have to take exams.
- C) It offers flexibility for busy people.
- D) You can learn medicine easily online.

The Future of Sustainable Travel

Traveling is one of life's greatest pleasures, allowing us to explore new cultures and landscapes. However, the rise of mass tourism has brought significant challenges to the environment and local communities. This has led to the growth of "sustainable travel," also known as ecotourism. The main goal of sustainable travel is to minimize the negative impact of tourism while maximizing the benefits for the places we visit.

One of the most important aspects of sustainable travel is transport. Air travel contributes a large amount of carbon emissions, so many travelers are now choosing to take trains or buses for shorter distances. Once they arrive at their destination, they prefer walking or cycling instead of using cars. This not only protects the environment but also allows people to see more of the local area at a slower, more enjoyable pace.

Accommodation also plays a key role. Sustainable travelers often look for "eco-hotels" that use renewable energy, such as solar power, and have strict recycling programs. They also tend to avoid large international hotel chains and choose smaller, locally-owned guesthouses. This ensures that the money spent by tourists goes directly into the local economy, helping small businesses and families grow.

Reducing waste is another essential part of being an eco-traveler. Using a reusable water bottle and avoiding plastic bags are simple steps that can make a big difference. Moreover, respecting local traditions and protecting wildlife are fundamental rules. For example, tourists should never feed wild animals or buy products made from endangered species. In conclusion, sustainable travel is not about stopping tourism, but about traveling more carefully. By making small changes in how we move, where we stay, and what we buy, we can ensure that future generations will also be able to enjoy the beauty of our planet.

34. What is the main objective of sustainable travel according to the text?

- A) To stop people from visiting foreign countries.
- B) To reduce the costs of international flights.
- C) To protect the environment while benefiting local areas.
- D) To encourage people to stay in large hotel chains.

35. Why are some travelers choosing trains over airplanes for short distances?

- A) Because trains are always faster than planes.
- B) To reduce the amount of carbon emissions.
- C) Because they want to avoid meeting other people.
- D) To save time on their vacation.
